

Kasper Asmussen

Application: Marketing Operations Lead · Understory · att. Christian Berndt

Ready for a coffee in Aarhus

UNDERSTORY

CHRISTIAN · UNDERSTORY

Hi Kasper. Why Understory, and why this role?

KASPER

Nobody starts a kayak business to spend their evenings in Meta Ads Manager. I know, because I work for a travel company that sells experiences, and taking that work off people's hands is what I do every day.

Understory has been on my radar for a long time. I am a walking fusion of an old-school marketer and a tech nerd, and a platform that runs bookings, payments, websites and ads for experience creators is a perfect 12, as we say in Denmark. What really gives me an appetite is that you went AI-native while most are still waiting, and that the next step is AI-led.

CHRISTIAN · UNDERSTORY

Our team runs on agents and in-house tools. What have you actually done with AI in paid media?

KASPER

When I took over Meta Ads at Africa Tours in August, the analysis, reporting, setup and changes ran through AI workflows within 30 days, and daily leads went from 0-2 to 5. On Google Ads at VoiceArchive I raised search impression share from 17 to 40%, so our ads showed up on more than twice as many of the searches that bring in customers.

30 days	0-2 → 5	17 → 40%	22 hrs
to run Meta Ads through AI workflows at Africa Tours	daily leads in my first 14 days	search impression share on Google Ads at VoiceArchive	saved per week with AI agents

CHRISTIAN · UNDERSTORY

We need one quality bar for both people and agents. How do you think about that?

KASPER

Volume is the easy part with agents. The hard part is deciding where a person has to look, and writing it down so everyone delivers the same quality on the same timeline.

That is why I always start with a tour de chambre. I sit next to the people doing the work, see how it actually flows, and only then draw the line between human in the loop and oversight. I physically cringe when someone does the same manual step twice, but I would rather move that line one measured step at a time than all at once.

CHRISTIAN · UNDERSTORY

You would be leading the team. Have you done that before?

KASPER

Honest answer: not with the title. I have had project lead responsibility, and the tools I build end up being used by my colleagues, from a capacity tool that puts priorities, tasks and hours in one view to an AI assistant for a director.

So look at me like a stock. The entry price is a lead without the title. The upside is a lead who can build the machine your team runs on, and explain it so Sales, Customer Success and the team can all use it.

CHRISTIAN · UNDERSTORY

What would your first 90 days look like?

KASPER

Delivering for customers starts on day one. Alongside it, I would build the foundation:

1. Day 1 to 30: learn the machine
   Deliver hands-on in Meta, Google, websites and reviews, sit next to each teammate and map where a person steps in today.
2. Day 31 to 60: write the playbook
   Version one with Sales and Customer Success, one page per product, plus a simple dashboard showing delivery time and quality per customer.
3. Day 61 to 90: move the line
   Pick one step with Product and move it from human in the loop to oversight, measured before and after.

Further down the road I would love an agent that checks every creative against our quality bar before a person sees it. But we build that once we know the machine.

I know I don't have much experience as a leader, and I am not the best paid specialist in the pile. But I do have the biggest drive to grow together with AI. That is why I hope my profile can be relevant for this role, or for other roles at Understory.

I would happily come by the office and draw the machine on a whiteboard with you.

Thanks for your time, Christian.
Best regards, Kasper kasmussen80@gmail.com · 22 46 38 40 · linkedin.com/in/kasperasmussen · hey-kasper.dk